How valuable is a degree in Spanish?

As increasing globalization and immigration bring the economies, cultures and values of the world's populations into closer and more frequent contact, the study of foreign languages, Spanish in particular, has never been a more valuable asset. Consequently, the need for Spanish teachers at all levels of instruction is at an all-time high. Students who train to be Spanish teachers are in demand all over the United States and graduates who are certified to teach Spanish are extremely likely to find jobs in education. However, Spanish study is not just for prospective educators. Because of a growing Hispanic presence making Spanish the second most-used language in the United States, Spanish proficiency is quickly becoming a practical necessity in a wide range of professional and social service careers. Competency in Spanish enhances employability in a variety of careers at home and overseas. Accountants, financial planners, law-enforcement officers, lawyers, social workers, travel agents and other professionals that speak Spanish and have an understanding of Hispanic culture, have a distinct advantage over their monolingual counterparts on the local and global job markets.
